a Hackensack Man Was Forced Against His Will

TO PLAY A SPOOKISH ROLE

e Stepped Out to Get His Paper and Before He Could Heturn Was Put to His Wit's End.

New Yong, July 19.-When Edward estervelt, a well-known resident of schenasch, N.J., went out on his perch get the morning paper a draught ammed the front door to. He was in his night shirt, had no keys and was in a quandary, for the lower floor of the house was guarded by solid wooden shutters and there was no one insule, the family being at Asbury park. The house is situated in one of the most aristocratic parts of the place and Mr. Westerveit did not dare to remain long where he was. He did not like to awaken any of the neighbors and was in a serry plight. There were open windows on the second story, and after some thought Mr. Westerveit decided to go to a lumber ward, six blocks away, and obtain a ladder. He recognized that the trip was a risky one, as some of his neighbors might be up before he returned and catch him in his plight, but decided to take the chances. He hurried to the humber yard, secured the indder and started for his bouse.

All went well until he was within a is night shirt, had no keys and was in

All went well until he was within a block of his house with the ladder on his back. Then he came suddenly on a party of young laines from a neighboring house who were out for a morning walk. The young ladies and Mr. Westerwitt were within twenty feet of each breakt were within twenty feet of each other when they cannot be such to be and the care of the county for the care of terreit were within twenty feet of each other when they caught sight of each other. The young laffies gave one look at the white-robed figure and with a chorus of shrieks fied. Mr. Westerreit fellowed them with the lastier and the lasties thought he was chasing them, but he was chasing them, but he was cally hurrying to get to his own house. The faster he ran the louder the lasties stricked. Finally Mr. Westerveit gained his own yard, and with a rejoining grasp placed the lastier against his house. He was inside in a moment, and after recovering his breath, dressed and after recovering his breath, dressed himself. Meanwhile the ladies ran home and shocked their male friends with a tale of a ghost. Later in the day the whole story came out, and it is hard to say who suffered the most from the joining of friends. Mr. Westervelt or the

MARTYRS TO HEADACHES.

The Experience of Mus Louise Lincoln

Tucker, a Hoston Baleswoman. The women who are martyrs to sick headache are numbered by thousands, and among the victims none suffer more than the employes in stores and shops, says the Lynn Sunday News.

Their work is confining, the hours are long, and the surroundings are often such as to aggravate the tendency to headaches.

Miss Louise Lincoln Tucker has been employed in this establishment for the past four years, and during that time, as for years before, she, has suffered with sick headache to such an extent as to compel her many times to leave her business and return to her home in West Rexbury.

So violent have these attacks been that she has often been unable to walk from the store to the depot, and has been compelled to call a carriage.

This succession of tortures continued until last March, when Miss Tucker's attention was attracted by the story of another woman's experiences, published in a Boston paper.

another woman's experiences, published in a Boston paper.

She had spent large amounts of money on physicians, who had been unable to relieve her sufferings. She decided to try the merits of the highly extolled Paine's celery compound.

She took it without the knowledge of her family or friends.

But the change in her appearance soon attracted the attention of the members of her family and her business associates, and, thoroughly couvinced, she one day told how Paine's celery compound had wrought for her the cure which physicians had been unable to accomplish.

For the first time in the years of her employment she had gone through an entire month without a return of the attacks, and not only a relief but an absolute cure has been effected by the compound.

So grateful is Miss Tucker for the cure in her case, that she is willing to let all who suffer as she did, know of the only remedy she ever found.
